Tax savings to communities

Quality early education saves public costs in the short- and long-term.

Because quality early learning prepares children to succeed in school, they are less likely to require special education services, remediation, or be held back a grade. Because special education can cost twice as much as typical education, the savings from providing quality early education are immediate and add up quickly.

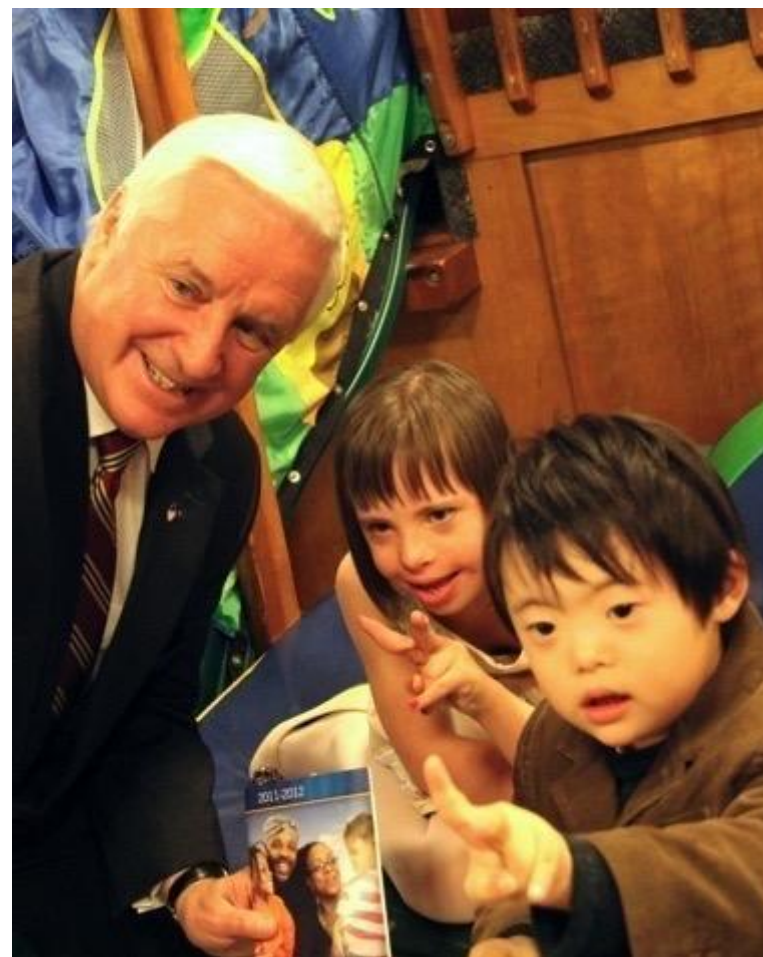

As adults these children are also less likely to need public assistance, commit crimes, or be incarcerated.

In fact, Every $1 invested in quality early education saves $7 in special education, public assistance, corrections, and lost taxes.

Because children who receive quality early education have higher earnings and are more likely to own a home, they are more likely to contribute to the tax base than rely on public assistance.

I just wanted to reach out to let you know how AWESOME Alex is doing in math. He comes in each day and just rocks! Today we took a concept quiz on solving algebraic proportions. Alex stayed in the classroom with the rest of the class and Mr. G stepped off to the side while he worked and he aced the quiz completely on his own. Mr. G and I kept wandering by in awe as he worked through the steps on his own. He didn't seem to be hung up at any point while other students in the class got stuck on one question in particular. Im so proud of him and love seeing him have so much success!!!

Puzzle, puzzle, here!

- A. You just ignore him. There's no point in having an interaction because he's not going to understand what you say anyway because of his cognitive delay.
- B. Because he apparently has a diagnosis, you help him by correcting him. You kindly teach him it's a tree by signing and having him repeat the sounds after you.
- C. By spending time with him, you realize that he is obsessed with the movie, Tangled, and figure out that he is pretending Rapunzel is way up in the tree and calling, "Rapunzel, Rapunzel, let down your hair!"
